

“THINKABOUTIT” THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

Tuesday; March 25, 2008

When the ancients walked into the temple of Apollos in Delphi they were met with the inscription that has been translated, “Know Thyself”. Within the Greek world, this challenge compelled them to take a break from looking around at their world to looking inwardly into their lives. They were inspired to not only see the creation that was around them; but, the character that was within them.

Sometimes it’s good to go back in time and reclaim the call of days gone by. We live in a time when it appears that everyone has an opinion about everything. We assess how people live, play, govern and dress. We are ready to blog and blab our beliefs about everything from sports to entertainment to government. While this is a wonderful right in our country, let’s not forget to take on essential responsibility of self-reflection. No one – save God Himself – can know us any better than we know ourselves, so why not take that knowledge and spin it into something that can better us and enhance the world.

Think about it! For the Madison Avenue Church of Christ; this is Charlie Wharton.
